Joint Submission to the UN Universal Periodic Review
Twenty-Third Session of the UPR Working Group of the Human Rights Council
2-13 November 2015

Created in 2005, the Global Justice Center (GJC) is a US based human rights organization with consultative status to the United Nations that works to achieve sustainable justice, peace and security by building a global rule of law based on gender equality and universally enforced international human rights laws. The Leitner Center for International Law and Justice at Fordham University School of Law develops capacity-building and advocacy partnerships with grassroots social justice organizations across the globe, including women's rights activists in Myanmar. Our organizations work in partnership to combat the deeply rooted and systemic human rights abuses against women in Myanmar, which are outlined in this submission.
