The All-China Women's Federation, founded in April 1949, is the largest national women's organization in the country. It aims to represent and safeguard the rights and interests of women and promote equality between men and women. The Federation consists of national, local and grassroots organizations, as well as group members. ACWF enjoys consultative status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council, actively participating in women related activities in UN and across the world. It has established friendly ties with many organizations for women and children in the world, and plays a positive role in the exchanges among women home and abroad.
